

From Lori Warchuck's Desk,

Spring is the time of year when our 4-H'ers are busy getting prepared for livestock projects to arrive. This is also a great time to think about keeping records related to their project; especially if it's a market animal project that they are planning to sell in the fair livestock auction.

4-HMarket Animal projects provide our 4-H'ers an opportunity to gain life skills such as record keeping, communication and self responsibility through raising and selling their market livestock animal. Market animals put an entrepreneurial focus on the 4-H animal project, and can be incorporated into the learning experience in any animal species. Entrepreneurial concepts learned through the market animal project and demonstrated through completion of the Michigan 4-H Animal Market Project Record Book are:

◆ Goal setting

◆ Identifying target markets and marketing strategies

◆ Distinguishing product features

◆ Communication strategy and sales pitch

◆ Record keeping

◆ Break-even price and profitability

The Michigan 4-H Animal Market Project Record Books are a tool for 4-H members to learn and document their understanding of livestock marketing concepts. The Michigan 4-H Animal Market Project Record Book has been developed at three levels: Beginner, Intermediate, and Advanced. I would encourage all youth participating in a market animal project to consider completing a record book even if it's not in the fair market project requirement.

Spring is also a great time to reach out to buyers by sending a picture of the new market project animal or a note. It is the 4-H'ers responsibility to recruit buyers for their market project animals. I would recommend at least three buyers for each species you plan on selling in the fair livestock sale.

Resources to help 4-H'ers write a great buyer's letter are available at the link below. Don't wait get started now!
